Beautiful white skin is what women always want.

Skin mechanism and cause of spots

Spots are caused by pigmentation resulting from an increased level of melanin.

Our skin consists of three layers: epidermis (outermost), dermis, and subcutaneous tissues. Basically, the epidermis and dermis are the two layers that make up the skin. The stratum basale, the innermost layer, constantly produces new cells, including melanocytes.

Epidermal cells change as they migrate to the skin's surface where cells are formed in the stratum corneum and dead cells called coenocytes are eliminated. This process is called skin cell turnover; it takes about 28 days. If dead cells remain on the stratum corneum for a longer period, the skin will become hard and flaky. In addition, excessive melanin production induced by UV radiation may result in the absorption of UV radiation, causing poor skin cell turnover in the stratum corneum and hindering optimal melanin metabolism. This effect leads to pigmentation and skin spots. Care from within the body to experience a skin whitening effect As you age, your skin becomes dull and more susceptible to spots and the influence of UV radiation. Have you given up on skin whitening to improve the effects of aging and stress?

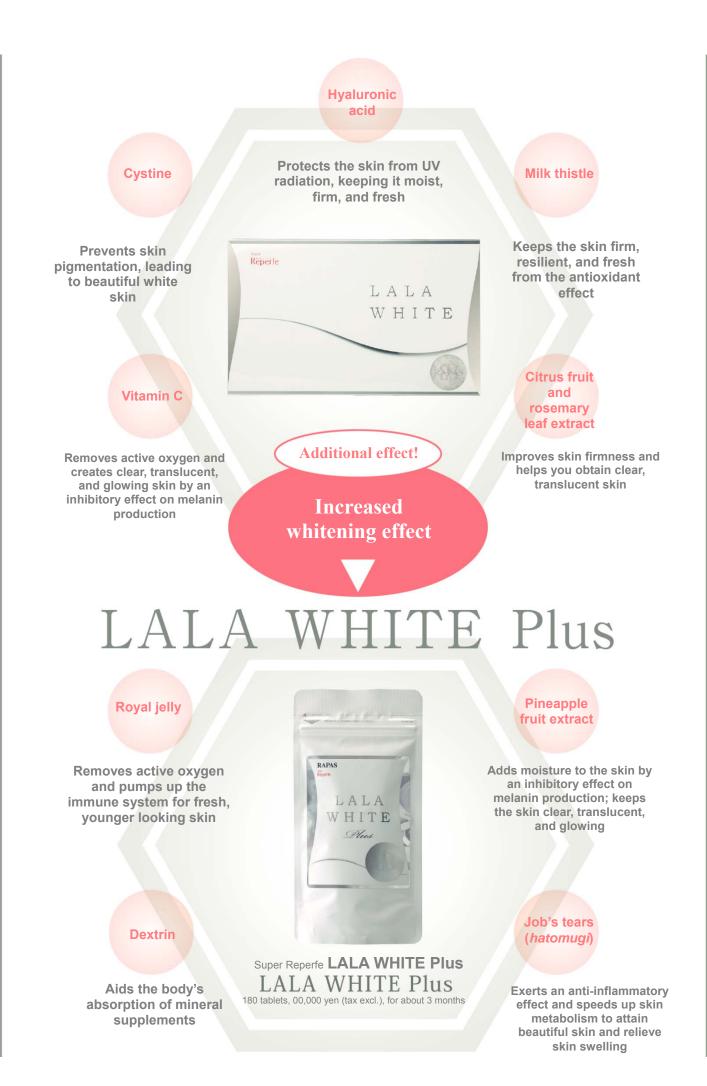

Applying a skincare product to your skin is one way to attain beautiful white skin, but a much better way to maximize whitening benefits is to take an oral supplement that has a direct effect on spots and skin dullness from deep within.
